Introduction

The Mennonite Bibliography, 1631-1961, presented here in two volumes after fifteen years of intermittent labor, is a direct continuation of the work of Hans J. Hillerbrand, A Bibliography of Anabaptism, 1520-1630 which was published in 1962. Both bibliographies were prepared under the direction of the Institute of Mennonite Studies, a research agency of the Associated Mennonite Biblical Seminaries of Elkhart, Indiana. The present bibliography could have become available at least one year earlier except for the conviction of the Institute and the authors that its usefulness would be greatly increased by the inclusion of author, subject, and book review indexes. Further guides to use of the Mennonite Bibliography and an explanation of the methodology followed in its compilation are given in the authors' Preface.

It is my pleasant task to acknowledge, with deep appreciation, the work of the authors and others involved in the preparation of the manuscript. Credit for initiating the Mennonite Bibliography belongs clearly to Harold S. Bender (1897-1962), who gave primary guidance to the work of A. J. Klassen in the initial stages of its preparation. Klassen was a student at the Associated Mennonite Biblical Seminaries when this work first began in 1959 and had completed most of his work by the time he left in August of 1962. He is presently serving as professor of theology at Mennonite Brethren Biblical Seminary, Fresno, California.

The bulk of the enormous detail of editing, the search for missing items, the verifying of title entries, reorganizing of materials in the light of new information, and the preparation of the indexes occupied large portions of Nelson P. Springer's time during the past ten years. The Institute is indebted to Goshen College for making it possible for him to give this time to the project. Only those who have compiled bibliographies of this magnitude can fully understand all that is involved in the preparation of such a work. Mr. Springer has served as curator of the Mennonite Historical Library at Goshen, Indiana, since 1949.

Also involved in the preparation of the Mennonite Bibliography in a major way were the following: Ds. Leo Laurense, pastor of the Mennonite church at Delft, The Netherlands, who prepared the Dutch entries; Bruno Epp of Winnipeg, Manitoba, whose linguistic and editorial skills were invaluable during the period of his Institute assistantship in 1973-74; Helen Brown and Cora Askren whose skill and attention to detail in the typing of parts of the manuscript greatly facilitated the progress of the project; and particularly Etta Schmitt of Goshen, Indiana, who not only typed a major part of the entire Mennonite Bibliography, but also assisted financially in the costs of preparation. The contributions of other participants are acknowledged in the authors' Preface.

It is with a sense of deep gratitude, as well as of relief, that the Institute releases this manuscript for publication. It has been a long and costly project. May it serve the cause of scholarship and, thereby, the kingdom of our Lord.

Cornelius J. Dyck, Director
Institute of Mennonite Studies
Elkhart, Indiana

Preface

The bibliography presented here is an attempt to meet the needs of those interested in studying the life and thought of Mennonites throughout the world from the close of the Anabaptist period through the first six decades of the twentieth century. The beginning date, 1631, follows immediately the terminal date of Hans Hillerbrand's A Bibliography of Anabaptism; 1961 is the date the planners originally hoped the work would be completed for publication. The magnitude of the task and unforseen circumstances prevented the realization of that plan. To have projected the scope of the bibliography to a more recent date would have delayed still further actual publication.

Our objective has been to report published materials of Mennonite authorship and statements about Mennonites by non-Mennonites. These include periodicals, books, pamphlets, dissertations, festschrifts, symposia, and encyclopedia and periodical articles. We have attempted to include all Mennonite bodies throughout the world and the closely related Brethren in Christ Church and Hutterian Brethren. North American groups which have dropped Mennonite from their official name are included until the date of the change. An individual from that group whose activity falls almost entirely in the earlier period is included until his death, for example, Jasper A. Huffman. Writings of Mennonite authors who changed denominational affiliation are included for their Mennonite period, or if later writings relate to Mennonite themes. In the case of Joost van den Vondel, whose writings are not only numerous, but have been published in many editions, one of the more important critical editions of his complete works is included, but nothing more. We have attempted uniformity and accuracy in bibliographic statement. In these statements we have used square brackets to indicate information not found on the title page of a book or pamphlet or in the title statement of a periodical article. Occasional informational notes are included after the statement of pagination. Locations symbols at the ends of entries are explained in a special table which follows this preface.

We have not included treatises by Mennonite authors of the later period dealing exclusively with the Anabaptist period. For a complete display of the production of a given writer of the period since 1631, the user will need to consult both this bibliography and Hillerbrand. However, when substantial sections of an item listed by Hillerbrand deal with Mennonites after 1631, that item has been included. Occasionally we have included general materials, for example, regional history which is primarily non-Mennonite, but includes a distinct section on Mennonites. In these instances, a parenthetical note identifies the reasons for inclusion.

While the bibliography is basically limited to published materials, we have included unpublished dissertations because of their relative importance and the fact that they are available through established channels. The listing includes only dissertations at the magisterial and doctoral levels. We acknowledge that some seminars and major term papers at the baccalaureate level and some nonacademic papers are also important, even though we have not included them. We have extended the terminal date for dissertations beyond 1961, including some that have been published. The designation of a publisher in the entry should help to distinguish those that have been published. Published dissertations appearing before 1961 are included with books, with the dissertation statement as a parenthetical note in the entry, if this information was apparent to us from the sources we used.

Ordinarily, periodical articles do not include editorials (unless they meet the standards of length applying to other articles), commentaries on the international Sunday school lessons, and other regular features by a given individual commonly referred to as "columns" appearing in successive issues of a given periodical over an extended period of time, even though such columns represent substantial contributions by the author. Occasional series relating to a specific topic are included, although the single units would not be long enough for inclusion.

The basic order of the bibliography is geographic, moving from the more general through continental to national. Within geographic divisions, we list periodicals first and then group other materials in three broad subject categories: history and description, doctrine, and miscellanea. There are further form subdivisions. Thus, the potential divisions and subdivisions for a given geographic area are:

- Periodicals
- History and description
  - Books
  - Unpublished dissertations
  - Festschrifts and symposia
  - Encyclopedia articles
  - Periodical articles
- Doctrine
  - Books
  - Unpublished dissertations
  - Curriculum materials
  - Periodical articles
- Miscellanea
  - Books
  - Unpublished dissertations
  - Periodical articles

Within these groupings the arrangement is chronological, then alphabetical by surname of author. Undated entries are placed before dated entries. Our intention has been to list a given item only once, relying on the indexes to lead the users to things relevant to his purpose.

As much as possible we have avoided subjective criteria in selecting items for inclusion. With full acknowledgment of the weaknesses of page and word counts, we have adopted these arbitrary devices as the lesser of two evils: a minimum of twenty-four pages for books and pamphlets (ten pages for historical treatments and occasional shorter statements of policy), 2,000 words for periodical articles, 1,500 words for encyclopedia articles. We arbitrarily excluded congregation yearbooks from our listings of periodicals, recognizing that our chances for achieving reasonably complete coverage were low.

We have attempted to list all editions of a given work. We did not list printings which are not true editions, unless the date of printing was stated on the title page, giving the impression of an edition. Entries for successive editions follow the earliest known edition within a given geographic area. We had planned cross-references to relate editions of a given work in one geographic area with those in another. Because of the extra time and costs involved, we reluctantly gave up these plans.

In the geographic classification of materials we have used two approaches. Historical and descriptive items are arranged according to the geographic area with which they deal. Doctrinal items reflect the production of these materials for use in a given country, although the author may have been of a different nationality, with the exception of reprints or translations of periodical articles appearing in other periodicals. Removal of an author from one country to another is recognized in the placement of his works in the bibliography. We have used names of countries current in 1961, as more representative of the time materials were produced than names current in 1975. Although Puerto Rico is closely akin to South America in character we have included it with North America as a territory of the United States. That the geographic arrangement has limitations became particularly apparent in North America, where conference activities often ignore international boundaries. Individuals, too, have moved quite freely between Canada and the United States so that much more research would have been required for differentiation between these two countries. We have placed all family histories and genealogies in the international section, although many of them are highly national in orientation. Most North American Mennonite families have their origins in Europe. Conversely, families whose published histories are centered in Europe often have their representatives in other European countries or in North or South America. The Hutterian Brethren in Europe have been treated as a special group because of certain difficulties in national identification.

Periodicals have received two levels of treatment. The bibliographic statement for official organs of older national groups, official denominational organs in North America, scholarly periodicals, and a few other periodicals of relatively greater importance is as complete as possible, including number of volumes, dates of publication, changes in title, editors, places of publication, and (where appropriate) relation to other periodicals. The bibliographic statement for minor periodicals is much more brief. In both instances, periodicals known to have ceased publication between 1961 and 1974 include terminal dates. Other periodicals continuing publication beyond 1961 have open-ended volume numbers and dates. Official publications of a given institution are grouped together. Asterisks mark the division between such a cluster and other clusters or individual titles. In the North American section, arrangement of periodicals is alphabetical by title or institution, rather than chronological.

Materials which are both historical-descriptive and doctrinal in nature are listed with history. We discovered that symposia dealing with doctrinal issues invariably include significant historical statements; hence, we placed them with history and description.

The term doctrine as a subject division is broad, including materials reflecting the values and judgments of Mennonites on many issues as well as theological questions.

The miscellanea sections include writings by Mennonite authors on subjects not fitting in either history and description or doctrine. These include many varieties of literature: novels, fiction, poetry, drama, general travel accounts, textbooks on nonscientific themes, secular songbooks, and objective descriptions of other denominations or religions. Polemic writings are placed with doctrine. Treatises on natural sciences have been arbitrarily excluded unless they deal with Mennonites or are philosophical in their approach. Thus, handbooks of anatomy are not included; ecological studies are. Here, again, we confess to certain limitations in our own preparation for the task. We do not feel that we are acquainted well enough in this area, and the sources at our disposal do not supply the information we need to identify Mennonite scientific writers in the natural sciences to give adequate coverage

To enhance the use of the bibliography we have provided three indexes: author, subject, and book review. As further aids to the user we have attempted to identify individuals by life dates, countries in which they have lived, denominational affiliation, and vocation. With the resources at hand and within the limits of reasonable research time, it has been impossible to provide this information in some instances. We confess to occasional "educated guesses" in instances which seemed to justify such conclusions. For some North American persons we have used the general term "Mennonite," when it was clear that the individual belonged to one of the Mennonite groups, but it was not clear to which particular one. We have also attempted to identify the Mennonite affiliation of institutions when the institutional name did not indicate it. The user should not assume that the absence of identification indicates that that particular individual or institution was not Mennonite.

The author index includes all authors, compilers, editors, illustrators, and translators named in the entries. In cases of joint authors, the entries indicate two or three joint authors, each of whom is indexed. When there have been more than three joint authors, only the first is named in the entry, followed by: [et al]. An exception would be festschrifts, symposia, and serials entries with analytical notes including names of authors of segments of the work. The number of subjects indexed varies from entry to entry. Reviews of non-Mennonite materials by Mennonite reviewers are listed by author of the item reviewed in a separate index. The name of the author of the review is included in the author index. Such reviews have their own entry numbers. Reviews of Mennonitica are included as part of the entry for the item reviewed and do not have distinctive numbers, nor are they included in the book review index. In the indexes square brackets indicate variants of names; parentheses, descriptive information.

In initial stages of compilation we drew upon earlier bibliographies such as Harold S. Bender's Two Centuries of American Mennonite Literature; John A. Hostetler's Annotated Bibliography on the Amish and the bibliographic sections of his God Uses Ink: Herbert Giesbrecht's "Centennial Checklist of Mennonite Brethren Publications" in The Voice; Willard H. Smith's "Mennonites in Latin America" in the Mennonite Quarterly Review; bibliographic reports in Mennonite Life and Mennonitische Geschichtsblätter; bibliographic listings in Who's Who Among the Mennonites by A. Warkentin and Melvin Gingerich; and the printed catalogues of Mennonite libraries in Amsterdam, Danzig, Hamburg, and Scottdale. In addition, we checked many other bibliographies in books, dissertations, encyclopedias, periodicals, and booklists. We used unpublished bibiographies: Milton Harder's "General Conference Bibliography," Christian Hege's "Mennonitische Literatur in zeitlicher Reihenfolge," Adolf Schnebele's "425 Jahre mennonitische Literatur" (Europe exclusive of the Netherlands), and Nelson Springer's supplement to Bender's Two Centuries. We identified Mennonitica in non-Mennonite general bibliographies: Henry A. Pochmann and Arthur R. Schultz's Bibliography of German Culture to America in 1940, Karl Stumpp's Das Schrifttumüber das Deutschtum in Russland, Ernst Wermke's Bibliographie der Geschichte von Ost- und West-Preussen, 1939-1951, and Norman B. Wilkinson's Bibliography of Pennsylvania History.

We have traced many obscure items through personal correspondence with numerous individuals, editors, and publishing houses of various Mennonite groups, privately operated Mennonite printing establishments as well as non-Mennonite publishers, Mennonite historical societies, and the historical societies of various states and provinces in North America and abroad. Some denominational materials were obtained through correspondence with secretaries of individual conferences. Mission board personnel and key missionaries in various countries listed items published in their areas. Individual writers provided additional items, and inquiries published in major denominational periodicals yielded some information.

Tracing the scholarly studies of Mennonites was a heretofore uncharted area and required extensive research. Dissertations were located through correspondence with alumni of Mennonite schools and colleges who had subsequently engaged in graduate study. Indexes of master's theses and doctoral dissertations from university libraries and theological schools, Microfilm Abstracts, and the Canadian index of theses and disssertations were scanned. "Mennonite Research in Progress" published annually in Mennonite Life provided valuable clues. We also checked such periodicals as the American Journal of Sociology and Church History.

The thousands of periodical entries were amassed by researching individual periodicals; checking selected subjects in major periodical indexes such as the Reader's Guide and International Index to Periodical Literature; and the unpublished list of periodical articles on Mennonites compiled by Delbert Gratz, librarian at Bluffton College, Bluffton, Ohio

A. J. Klassen directed compilation of data for the Bibliography, not only supervising assistants, but personally carrying on extensive correspondence and visiting libraries other than the Mennonite Historical Library at Goshen College where compilation and editing were centralized. The basic core of bibliographic information for Mennonites in the Netherlands was supplied by Leo Laurense. In addition to this help Klassen was assisted by his wife, Betty, Helen Brenneman, Mary Cender, Waldemar Egar, Ingrid Ewert, Elizabeth Gingerich, Evelyn Habegger, Henry Isaac, Marcyne Jost, Ruth Kortemeier, Rachel Kreider, Angelina Maniaci, John Thiessen, Janet Umble, Rachel Yoder, and others. Solomon Loewen of Tabor College and John S. Umble of Goshen College supplied lists of alumni of their respective institutions who have done graduate work. Assisting both in the compliation of materials and later responding to questions arising out of copy-editing were Herbert Giesbrecht of the Mennonite Brethren Bible College Library at Winnipeg, Delbert Gratz of the Mennonite Historical Library at Bluffton College, Mary Kliewer of the Tabor College Library, Cornelius Krahn of the Bethel College Mennonite Library and Archives, I.G. Neufeld of the Hiebert Library at Fresno, and others. Before Klassen's active participation in the project ceased, he had done preliminary work in the collation and classification of data he had collected.

Nelson Springer was responsible for final collation, organization, editing, and indexing of data collected by this rather large group of persons from such a variety of sources, and added entries for materials coming to his attention during the course of this work. Many problems arose from differing practices of bibliographic citation, particularly with European materials. Published catalogs as well as other bibliographic sources often presented incomplete and widely different statements of titles for a given document. Similarity of names and occasionally variant names and pseudonyms made the exact identification of individual authors difficult. Fortunately, the many resources of the Mennonite Historical Library at Goshen enabled him to compare actual documents and periodical articles with copy that had been prepared. Barbara Smucker assisted him in standardizing copy of entries of periodicals, periodical articles, and dissertations. Bruno Epp did painstaking work as proofreader of the final copy of the bibliography. Bruno Epp, Sharon Klingelsmith, Lena Lehman, Gloria Martin, Maxine Mullet, Roseyn Rychener, and others performed the often tedious tasks of sorting cards, adding classification and entry numbers, and proofreading intermediate and final copies of the indexes. Sharon Klingelsmith's extensive assistance with the preparation of indexes moved the work forward to completion significantly.

Cornelius J. Dyck became general editor of the project after the death of H. S. Bender. To him fell the responsibility of seeing to conclusion an unwieldy project, with problems unforeseen in its earlier stages. As the investment of time and money increased, he faced the difficult decision of dropping the project or committing the Institute of Mennonite Studies to additional costs. We owe him our gratitude for his patience, counsel, and moral support.

Finally, we are indebted to Paul M. Schrock, Book Editor of Herald Press, and to other members of the staff at Herald Press. We submitted copy to them on cards and, in some instances, on sheets of paper, which they arranged in columns of page-length for reproduction. This task alone was one that required special treatment to which they were not accustomed. We had anticipated few changes after this work was completed, but discovered errors in our copy that we wanted to correct. They were very gracious in working with these changes.

As we present this bibliography to the user, we do so with the full awareness that a comprehensive bibliography of this scope is certain to be incomplete. We are aware that there will be errors in the statement of facts, classification of entries, and identification of individuals. Instances of inconsistency in style, unintentional duplication of entries, entries that should not have been included, and misplacement of entries came to our attention during the final stages of the work when the problems of making corrections and possibilities of further errors were too great to justify changes. Gaps in the numerical sequence of entries result from cancellations and changes of classification after numbering had been completed. For these and other weaknesses we beg the indulgence of the users.
